

A Tentative Evaluation of the Spread of Humour Studies Among Journals in Other Domains

Ephraim Nissan *

Abstract. There exist bibliographies from the 1990s of humour studies, in book form or posted online. What this essay attempts to do is to consider a large sample of the bibliography of the domain, and assess the spread among a vast range of journals from several disciplines. Being a sample, our own bibliography is not exhaustive, but it nevertheless contains much material that had not come to the attention of earlier bibliographers. It is up to date to 2011, and it is limited to publications in journals only. Moreover, such publications are excluded that appeared in any of the journals specialised solely in humour studies. The distillation in the form of a list of journals organised chronologically is interesting. It shows that humour studies are a big domain, and one that is far-flung; it also suggests that mutual visibility in this discipline is limited. Articles about humour turn out in surprising outlets, such as a journal of children dentistry, or journals in the history of pharmacy (political cartoons with an apothecary or medical theme have been historically frequent), or Fertility and Sterility, or Public Administration Review, or a journal of parliamentary history, or a law journal. This essay is a discursive, qualitative, sampling probe into the seawide literature of the sector, rather than quantitative study as would be expected in bibliometrics. Arguably the present format subserves the goal of conveying a good idea of the size and variety of the domain.

1. An Array of Subdisciplines, and the Historical Record of Publication Venues

The flagship of humour studies, HUMOR: International Journal of Humor Research, has clearly established journal-publication standards for humour research in the Anglosphere and beyond. The present journal, the freely accessible, electronic, fully refereed Israeli Journal of Humor Research: An International Journal, is being inaugurated in 2012, twenty-five years after HUMOR was.

A national-level Israeli journal, Humor Mekuvvan: A Research Journal in Humor Studies, was successfully launched in 2011. In France, the journal Humoresques has splendidly combined perspectives from the humanities and media studies with humour studies, and publishes two thematic issues every year (it was preceded by another periodical of CORHUM,¹ the Cahiers de recherche de CORHUM-CRIH), whereas Ridiculosa, also in France, combines research into political cartoons and other fields, especially history. (Ridiculosa's approach is different from that of Target in the U.S., which covers political cartoonists.) There also used to exist Le Rire et l'Humour, which e.g. in 1963 published a paper on humour from Burundi.

There exist specialist journals, such as Studies in American Humor, and Thalia: Studies in Literary Humor, as well as the International Journal of Comic Art. The year 1997 saw the launch of the Australian Journal of Comedy. There also exists (or existed) the periodical Therapeutic Humor. There also exist, or have historically existed, journals devoted to an individual author of comedy (in particular, Le Moliériste, about Molière, was established in 1879, and published during the 1880s), or an individual author of humorous texts (e.g., The Mark Twain Annual, published from 2003). It is important to realise that some articles from Le Moliériste are found cited in the literature that were primarily concerned with historical details of Molière's life and career, not with the workings of his humour. Likewise, some articles of The Mark Twain Annual are not primarily concerned with his humour. Also consider the existence of journals devoted to a genre within a medium and within a given culture, e.g. (for Spanish theatre) the Bulletin of the Comediantes.² It is about drama, not necessarily comedies.

All issues of the journal Études Rabelaisiennes (published by Droz: it can also be considered a book series) is clearly quite relevant to humour studies,³ and therefore it is excluded from the present bibliographical analysis. We also exclude the Cahiers du Collège de Pataphysique, a periodical sui generis which changed names several times⁴ as a matter of policy,⁵ and which is primarily a forum in humour⁶ (rather than in humour studies), but where on occasion papers of serious scholarly interest have appeared,⁷ and where moreover some important works of the belles lettres were first published (e.g., La Cantatrice chauve by Eugène Ionesco).

Articles which contribute to humour studies have been appearing in a wide range of journals (to say nothing of a flurry of books appearing in disparate venues). The JSTOR database has thousands of relevant articles,⁸ especially but not only in

² "Published semiannually by the Comediantes, an international group of scholars interested in early modern Hispanic theater, the Bulletin welcomes articles and notes in Spanish and English dealing with sixteenth- and seventeenth-century peninsular and colonial Latin American drama" (quoted from <http://www.comediantes.org/>). In 2012, its editor is Edward H. Friedman of Vanderbilt University. As explained at the journal website: "the BCom Journal Archive, where you can browse the complete collection of the journal's cover art and tables of contents prior to 61.1 (2009). For issues 61.1 and later, please visit Project MUSE: http://muse.jhu.edu/journals/bulletin_of_the_comediantes/"

⁸ Even just for "humor" and "humour", disregarding medical senses such as in "aqueous humor", or "vitreous humour", or (in the history of medicine) the four humours of the humorists, in line with Hippocratic and Galenic doctrine: health was a balance of blood, phlegm, black bile, and yellow bile, affecting one's temperament. Also bear in mind that the temperament typically associated with

English, and even so there are some papers (even in English) that appear to be missing (or then, it is a matter of which batches of JSTOR journals the institutional subscription is for).⁹ Jason Rutter's bibliography of 1997, updated to 2007 as posted at <http://www.cric.ac.uk/usercgi/cric/search.asp?> fits in about 250 pages; all the more so because it is available online, it is an exceptionally important resource,¹⁰ remarkably well-informed, but it is nevertheless incomplete.

My own bibliography only partly overlaps with it, not only because Rutter's excellent bibliography is starting to show its age, or because we chose to omit books and chapters in books, but also because because of Rutter's unawareness of some entries we uncovered. In print, you may turn of course to Don Nilsen's bibliographies in book form, namely, his Humor Scholarship: A Research Bibliography (Westport, CT: Greenwood Press, 1993), and Humor in American Literature: A Selected Annotated Bibliography (New York: Garland, 1992).¹¹ Of course, there also exist literary studies bibliographies about particular authors,¹² or even just about a single comedy.¹³

There is an advantage in this bibliographical analysis essay appearing in an e-journal, because you can search the file for bibliographical entries in some particular journal, or for an author other than as being listed first or the only author. Different authors in different journals have treated topics that, apart from their being within the remit of propensity to laugh is the jovial temperament (as opposed to the melancholy saturnine temperament). Early rabbinic medical lore associated mirth with the spleen (Berakhot, 61b; Ecclesiastes Rabbah, 7:37), thus, contrary to the English double sense of spleen, which is not only a body part, but also denotes 'ill-temper' (cf. the adjective splenetic, and its Latin etymon, spleneticus).

⁹ For France, try <http://www.persee.fr> for "humour", "satire", "satirique", "comique", "dessin de presse" or "dessins de press", "histoire drôle" or "histoires drôles", "parodie", "parodique", "Farce", "Lucienfarce", "sarcasme", "ironie", "ironique", to say nothing of "Rabelais". I had to exclude several items identified by Persée as pertinent and retrieved when I searched for "comique", as also included because of mis-scanning were papers or reviews in Celtic linguistics or toponymy or hagio-toponymy mentioning "cornique", i.e., the Cornish language, now extinct and belonging to the Celtic language family. The scanned samples Persée provides gave such linguistic data as belonging to a language called "comique".

There is a rich literature in French about farces as meant in humour studies, but I had to exclude one item that was concerned with the gastronomical sense: "toutes les farces sont à base de mouton" and the like ("ce sont des pâtes farcies, genre ravioli, petits pâtés ou galettes, cuites à la vapeur"), in a 1983 paper by Françoise Sabban, "Cuisine à la cour de l'empereur de Chine: les aspects culinaires du Yinshan Zhengyao de Hu Sihui", Médiévales, 2(5), pp. 32–56.

For "histoire drôle", one irrelevant item that was retrieved was actually about "L'histoire de la drôle de guerre", that tragic prelude in the history of France. It was a book review by Pierre Laborie, published in 1995 in Vingtième Siècle: Revue d'histoire, 30(1), pp. 118–119, of the two volumes of Jean-Louis Crémieux-Brilhac's Les Français de l'an 40. Persée lists first those items in whose title the words searched for appear. Importantly, sometimes relevant items are listed after an irrelevant item, and this was the case of the results of the search for "histoire drôle" indeed.

humour studies, share as well something else. For example, Efthymia Canner published in 1995 a paper in French — in Revue du monde musulman et de la Méditerranée — about the Greek satirical press in Istanbul in the aftermath of the Young Turk Revolution, whereas Marie-Christine Varol published in 1992 a paper in French (in Langage et société) about plurilingualism as being a factor in jokes told by the Judaeo-Spanish speaking community of Istanbul.¹⁴

There are several ways of looking at a bibliography. For example, few would fail to be impressed by how many joint authors the following paper has: in 2009, HUMOR published, in Vol. 22, Nos. 1/2, on pp. 253–279, the article “Breaking ground in cross-cultural research on the fear of being laughed at (gelotophobia): A multi-national study involving 73 countries”; its authors were René T. Proyer, Willibald Ruch, Numan S. Ali, Hmoud S. Al-Olimat, Toshihiko Amemiya, Tamirie Andualem Adal, Sadia Aziz Ansari, Špela Arhar, Gigi Asem, Nicolas Baudin, Souha Bawab, Doris Bergen, Ingrid Brdar, Rute Brites, Marina Brunner-Sciarra, Amy Carrell, Hugo Carretero-Dios, Mehmet Celik, Grazia Ceschi, Kay Chang, Chen Guo-Hai, Alexander Cheryomukhin, Maria P. Y. Chik, Wladyslaw Chlopicki, Jacquelyn Cranney, Donatien Dahourou, Sibe Doosje, Margherita Dore, Nahwat El-Arousy, Emilia Fickova, Martin Führ, Joanne Gallivan, Han Geling, Lydia Germikova, Marija Giedraityte, Abe Goh, Rebeca Díaz González, Sai Kin Ho, Martina Hrebícková, Belen Jaime, Birgit Hertzberg Kaare, Shanmukh Kamble, Shahe Kazarian, Paavo Kerkkänen, Mirka Klementová, Irina M. Kobozeva, Snjezana Kovjanic, Narasappa Kumaraswamy, Martin Lampert, Chao-Chih Liao, Manon Levesque, Eleni Loizou, Rolando Díaz Loving, Jim Lyttle, Vera C. Machline, Sean McGoldrick, Margaret McRorie, Liu Min, René Möttus, Margret M. Munyae, Carmen Elvira Navia, Mathero Nkhala, Pier Paolo Pedrini, Mirsolava Petkova, Tracey Platt, Diana-Elena Popa, Anna Radomska, Tabassum Rashid, David Rawlings, Victor J. Rubio, Andrea C. Samson, Orly Sarid, Soraya Shams, Sek Sisokohm, Jakob Smári, Ian Sneddon, Irena Snikhovska, Ekaterina A. Stephanenko, Ieva Stokenberga, Hugo Stuer, Yohana Sherly Rosalina Tanoto, Luis Tapia, Julia Taylor, Pascal Thibault, Ava Thompson, Hanna Thörn, Hiroshi Toyota, Judit Ujlaky, Vitanya Vanno, Jun Wang, Betsie Van Der Westhuizen, Deepani Wijayathilake, Peter S. O. Wong, Edgar B. Wycoff, and Eun Ja Yeun.

Another curiosity is the occurrence of homonymy not merely of individual authors, but of pairs of authors. We have at least such an occurrence, and it is in the literature of the psychology of humour. The psychologists Schmidt and Williams who published a paper on humour thirty years apart were not the same: N.E. Schmidt and D.I. Williams in 1971, vs. S.R. Schmidt and A.R. Williams in 2001. This suggests how widespread this kind of research is, even though statistically one cannot draw conclusions from such anecdotal evidence.

It is noteworthy to signal that women authors who published in humour studies already occur in the early 20th century. That was the case of Irene Nye, who published “Humor Repeats Itself” in The Classical Journal in 1914.

2. A List of Periodicals Organised Chronologically

The following list of periodicals, organised chronologically, is far from exhaustive,¹⁵ but it is nevertheless indicative. By searching this file for the title of a given journal, the reader will find in the bibliography such papers that have appeared there; the bibliography provided the distillation in the following list of periodicals. Bear in mind that for the period before 1970 or 1960, this distillation is scanty because our data's incompleteness is more significant for that period — there is some such material I did not find time as yet to upload by June 2012, when this paper was first posted online — so beware of the wrong impression that a mass of research only came into existence in the last third of the 20th century.

That is definitely not the case: just think of literary studies or classical studies in the 19th and early 20th centuries, some of whose papers of course were concerned with wit, or satire, or comedy. One of the difficulties in tracing older papers in periodicals through the bibliographical notes in articles from the early 20th century, or the 19th century or even earlier, is the old habit of only providing sorely incomplete publication data, not merely with the journal names acronymised and the title of the article abbreviated, but oftentimes also by omitting the title of the paper cited altogether (the omission of the title is still the common practice in various journals in engineering, e.g. Nuclear Science and Engineering).¹⁶

Also bear in mind that in the late 19th century, various books on humour or laughter were published in English; one has to also consider the kind of publication, in order to assess the extent of scholarly involvement with humour in a given decade in the last two centuries.

There are venues of publication that became obsolete in the 20th century, but that in the previous two centuries were important: anthologies published as wedding offerings, and printed and distributed by families to invitees at weddings (serti nuziali in Italian; historically, the fire at the National Library in Turin resulted in the loss of many of these).¹⁷

¹⁵ Just think, for example, of the scholarly literature in Rabelais studies, or on particular comedies or comedigraphers, which we cannot even begin to cover in this bibliography. Also consider given genres, in which humour is often present, but which are not normally categorised as belonging to humour studies. For example, the Romantic Physiologists, in literary studies.

The following is quoted from an interesting encyclopaedic text by Valérie Stiénon of the University of Liège (http://www.flsh.unilim.fr/ditl/Fahey/PHYSIOLOGIEPhysiology_n.html), entitled “PHYSIOLOGIE / Physiology” “En littérature, le mot ‘physiologie’ est un titre générique qui désigne de nombreux petits livres illustrés parus en France dans la première moitié du XIX^e siècle, et plus spécialement dans les années 1840–1842, sous la Monarchie de Juillet. Ces textes traitent des thèmes de société les plus divers, bien souvent avec légèreté, originalité et humour, et se présentent sous la forme d’études de mœurs croisées au traité scientifique. Certaines physiologies choisissent pour sujet des catégories humaines qu’elles transforment en types sociaux, moraux ou professionnels (le bourgeois, l’étudiant, l’usurier, le médecin, la lorette, le bas-bleu, le musicien, le flâneur, etc.), d’autres commentent la fréquentation de lieux publics parisiens (les théâtres, les Champs-Élysées, les cafés, les bals, etc.), d’autres encore décrivent des objets et des accessoires de mode en rapport avec l’actualité politique et culturelle (les physiologies du gant, de la poire, du parapluie, notamment).”

I cite, about the Physiologists, papers by Ruth Amossy (1989), Nathalie Basset (1984, 1986), Alain Buisine (1977), James Cuno (1983), Antoinette Huon (1957), Andrée Lheritier (1957), Claude Pichois (1957), Richard Sieburth (1985), and Dimitri Stremoukhoff (1957).

My data about articles in periodicals from the 19th century in humour studies are scant, but in that century, several books on the subject were published, being specifically concerned with laughter or with humour. Of course, much was published about ancient Greek or Roman comedies or comedians in the classics, and there was sustained interest in the 17th-century French comedians.

One thing that emerges from the distillation given below is that on the one hand, there exist — even among those journals that are not specifically devoted to humour studies — such journals which often publish papers in one of our field's subdomains; and that on the other hand, there are "outliers", in which articles in humour research have appeared sporadically, such as Parliamentary History, or the Journal for the Study of the Pseudepigrapha, the American Indian Literatures Journal, or Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt, or then the Cornell Law Review, or Law & Social Inquiry, or the Revue d'histoire de la pharmacie (where caricatures with an apothecary theme have been a frequent subject),¹⁸ or the New England Journal of Medicine (on therapeutical humour), or even the Journal of Dentistry for Children, as well as Fertility and Sterility (the latter, on the benefits of medical clowning).¹⁹

Even just discovering such outliers ought to make browsing through the following list a tantalising task. Realising such spread means to better realise how big our field has grown to be. It also dispenses with having to justify a new international journal in humour research coming into being.

□ Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung in 1800 and 1807;²⁰

Family occasions as being an occasion for anthologies being published are associated with a textual genre also in the Far East: Grant Olson provides a discussion of Thai volumes published and distributed for cremation ceremonies. This is a textual genre specific to Thailand, yet one that has evolved in the direction of including also essays, and at one point in his article, Olson is puzzled by the thematic mix of essays in a particular volume: "In one volume (and I have yet to completely understand the logic of this one), the deceased had passed away due to a heart attack [...], but the cremation volume includes three essays: 'Cancer can be cured', 'The dangers of electricity', and 'How to grow sour tamarind'."

See: G.A. Olson, "Thai Cremation Volumes: A Brief History of a Unique Genre of Literature. (Volumes Published and Distributed for Cremation Ceremonies.)", Asian Folklore Studies, 51(2) (Japan, 1992), pp. 279–294 <http://ccbs.ntu.edu.tw/FULLTEXT/JR-EPT/olson.htm>

I would like to offer the hypothesis that cremation volumes came to fill the function that a serto nuziale filled in Italy in the 18th and 19th century. Whereas traditionally, such traditional wedding offerings included verse, or items of short literary prose, by the 19th century wealthy families celebrating a wedding would often fund the publication of a volume that included essays.

Actually, much scholarship is buried in such now almost unaccessible books, and indexing at Italy's national and regional libraries is the only way to learn about the existence of given essays, that had it not been for the liberality of the funders, would not have appeared in press at all.

Quoted by Beaty (1968, p. 429). Beaty also remarks (ibid.): “Even the delicate question of whether the heart was capable of sympathetic laughter had an apologist in Lamb, who differentiated between ‘the petrifying sneer of a demon which excludes and kills Love’ and ‘the cordial laughter of a man which implies and cherishes it.’ By laughing with rather than at humanity, one might enjoy him-self while heightening his benevolent proclivities. And if humor was produced by what was universally comic, laughter, especially from a man sufficiently perceptive to associate the ludicrous with traits in himself, could prove highly edifying.” Charles Lamb’s quotation is from his “On the Genius and Character of Hogarth” (1811), reprinted in The Works of Charles and Mary Lamb, ed. E.V. Lucas (London, 1903–1905), Vol. 1, p. 86. Charles Lamb was of course a steady contributor to the periodical press.

However original he may have been, he exhibited the character and peculiarities of Hebrew humor, of the wittiest and most light-hearted people of the world, which in the midst of unparalleled misfortunes and suffering, has preserved an incredible buoyancy and unconquerable spirit of satire”.

²² An important experimental psychologist, Alfred Binet was influential in pedagogy and concerning children's intelligence, and in particular, children with learning disabilities. Therefore, once you become aware that Binet was also a playwright (always in collaboration with André de Lorde), and that most of his plays were dramas (even the drama in two acts L'Horrible expérience, played at the Grand Guignol on 29 November 1909) — actually, one of them was made into a film by Maurice Tourneur in 1933–1934: Obsession ou l'Homme mystérieux — it comes as an unpleasant surprise by present-day sensibility to learn that Binet's only comical piece was a farce in one act, Le cerveau d'un imbécile, played at the Mathurins on 24 October 1906. He also authored the drama in two acts Crime dans une maison de fous [Crime at the Bedlam], published with the title Les Infernales, and played at the Grand Guignol in either May or June 1925. I learned that much by going through Binet's publication list, updated to 1 December 2000, prepared by Bernard Andrieu, and posted online at <http://www.univ-nancy2.fr/poincare/perso/andrieu/corpus.html>. Also consider Binet's works on creativity, and in particular: A. Binet and J. Passy, "La psychologie des auteurs dramatiques", La Revue philosophique de France et de l'étranger, 37 (1894), pp. 228–240, reprinted in: A. Pierron (ed.), 1998, Etudes de psychologie dramatique, Genève: Slatkine Reprints, 1998, pp. 15–80.

Studies on madness by Shoshana Felman are collected in her La Folie et la chose littéraire (Paris: Éditions du Seuil, 1978); she accepted Nerval's claim that fiction is in itself an act of communicative madness. Henri Godin concluded his review of Felman's book (The Modern Language Review, 75(3), 1980, pp. 651–652) by stating: "The search for a definition of madness now seems futile. Dr. Louis Bertagna, who attended Malraux, has recalled how fond his patient was of the story which told of a film made in a psychiatric hospital and shown to residents in a similar institution. After the performance, one of the oldest inmates said to her companion: 'On peut dire que, ce soir, on a vu c'est que c'est la folie!'"

Showing the madman through theatrical or cinematic representations fits within a broader pattern, for which, see Sander L. Gilman's The Face of Madness: Hugh W. Diamond and the Rise of Psychiatric Photography (New York: Brunner/Mazel, 1976; Secaucus, NJ: Citadel Press, 1977; Tokyo: Seiwa, 1980), and Id., Seeing the Insane: A Cultural History of Psychiatric Illustration (New York: Wiley Interscience, 1982; Behavioral Science Book Club, 1982; Psychotherapy and Social Science Book Club, 1982; Wiley Paperback, 1985. ²³ Kabakoff mentions, on p. 238, fn. 65, the New York Hebrew humorist Gerson Rosenzweig's "article Der Idisher Vits ['The Jewish Wit'], in Tsukunft, January 1902. In that article, G.R. discussed the essence of the Jewish joke and pointed out its appearance in the Hebrew Bible, in the Talmud, and in medieval poetry". In: Jacob Kabakoff, Halutzei ha-sifrut ha-'ivrit ba-America (in Hebrew, Pioneers of American Hebrew Literature). Tel Aviv: Yavneh, and Cleveland, Ohio: Cleveland College of Jewish Studies Press, 1966. Kabakoff's Hebrew-language book is about pioneering authors of Hebrew literature in America, and comprises both studies and documents. Those Hebraists include Zeev Wolf Schorr / William Schur (1839–1910), and Gerson Rosenzweig (1861–1914), as well as Henry Geroni (1844–1897), Isaac Rabinowitz (1846–1900), and Jacob Zevi Sobel. Kabakoff dealt with Rosenzweig in over fifty pages of that book (pp. 211–266).

²⁴ The reference is to the political cartoons of Thomas Nast (1840–1902).

²⁶ We are not concerned in this bibliographical analysis essay with books, other than when they are referred to in book reviews, but having mentioned Rohatyn's 1911 paper in German on Jewish humour, also consider that 1922 was the year of publication of Heinrich Loewe's book Reste von altem jüdischen Volkshumor, Berlin: Zahn & Baendel. Heinrich Loewe also authored the book Alter jüdischer Volkshumor aus Talmud und Midrasch, Reichenberg in Böhmen, 1931.

3. Envoi

This list, in which we strove to signal as many journals as possible other than the specialists journals one associates with humour research, could of course be longer. It is more than sufficient, however, to illustrate the sheer width of the scope exhibited in the spectrum of journals that have been publishing research on humour. So many scholars have been concerned with humour studies, that coming off from browsing this bibliography, or other, only partly overlapping bibliographies, is likely to be accompanied with a sense of modesty. In a historical perspective, it is almost impossible to draw a Who's Who and a Who Was Who of the discipline and manage to do that fairly. Humour being subjected to inquiry turns up in such a multitude of places, thanks to the endeavours of so many authors past and present, that what one is unaware of is inescapably wider than the compass of one's knowledge in the domain.

References

In the enumeration of journals provided in Sec. 2 of this essay, we cited the following papers by year and by the name of the journal, not by author name, deliberately in order to have our readers read throughout this bibliography, instead of just picking and choosing some given citation. We would like to stress that the function of this bibliography is as a large sample of scholarly articles that have to do with humour, but have appeared in journals other than humour studies journals. Therefore, neither books, nor articles from paper collections are included. This is the reason some prominent scholars in humour studies are absent from this bibliography; no inference should be drawn from their non-inclusion. The papers listed simply correspond to the list given in Sec. 2 above, of journals (other than the ones specialised in humour studies) that in a given year published at least one article resulting from research on humour. Whenever a journal special issue is signalled or a paper from it was included, we did not feel it necessary to list in this bibliography all of the articles from that particular special issue. Basically, it was enough to list one paper from a given journal in a given year, but on occasion we have listed more.

³⁹ "In the current standard treatises on laughter and the comic spirit satire appears as the least attractive and the least defensible of the many manifestations of the comic spirit, — if, indeed, it can be defended at all. No one cares to champion anything so ignoble and ill-mannered and negative. And it is not difficult to understand why this should be so, in view of the orientation and general tendency of modern theory regarding the nature of the comic. The psychologists and estheticians who have studied laughter and the comic spirit have quite properly insisted that in their 'pure' states they are innocent, even though they may be corrective; laughter is related to the play instinct, for instance, and the pure comic spirit is an enjoyable perception of mere incongruity, a free play of the intelligence without malice — as Meredith described it in his classic treatise. But in satire, they observe, the comic spirit is contaminated, if not obscured, by something foreign to its nature; in the place of hearty and wholesome laughter we get the sneer of malignity." (Bredvold 1940, p. 253).

Haydn’s “music interacted, and even interfered with the two poets’ intentions. All these circumstances make Le Pazzie d’Orlando/Orlando paladino a work that invites investigation into the uses of parody in eighteenth-century opera” (ibid.).]
